Nine More Days

Weekly Report 12/5 - 12/11

Through the past week in Independent Study and Mentorship, we have been working on completing a variety of different assignments in preparation for the Research Showcase, which will take place in only nine short class periods. On Tuesday, I decided that I no longer liked the design and format of my digital portfolio, and decided to recreate the entire website with a completely different layout, as well as more pictures and more organization, so that it would be much more visually pleasing to those who choose to view it. I was able to complete this on Friday, so that it will be ready to upload and publish on the December 16. The only section that I have not yet been able to complete is the Mentor Bio, as I do not have a mentor yet. I attempted to seek a mentor on Sunday, but I was told that another student was already under her mentorship. Because of this, I plan to attempt to ask another elementary music teacher at some point during this week, if I am able to contact her.

Through the next week, I plan to complete my final Interview Assessments and get them turned into Schoology for grading, complete my binder portfolio, and begin working on my Original Work. Although I will not complete my new curriculum for my Original Work, I will spend the majority of my Winter Break preparing for the Research Showcase by completing this, as well as putting my presentation board together. I also plan to begin sending out invitations.

While I am nervous for the upcoming Research Showcase, I am looking forward to being able to show off the work that I have put into the ISM program so far.
